HOW STATES ARE BUILDING STRONGER TEACHER PIPELINES

The pandemic exposed a problem already plaguing many districts and states: fewer young people are becoming teachers. As a result, some districts are struggling to put a qualified teacher in every classroom. Yet some innovators are tackling this problem. Join us to learn about new approaches to attracting high-quality, diverse candidates to the teaching profession.

Moderator: Dr. Cara Candal, Managing Director, Policy, ExcelinEd

Panelists:

- Commissioner Penny Schwinn, Tennessee Department of Education
- Senior Chancellor Henry Mack, Florida Department of Education
- Representative Robert Behning, Indiana House of Representatives
- Dr. Marni Baker Stein, Chief Academic Officer and Provost, Western Governors University

HOW TEST-BASED ACCOUNTABILITY HELPS STUDENTS FAR BEYOND THE CLASSROOM

Initial findings from new research confirm the importance of test-based accountability, the value of long-term tracking and the implications of test score increases on students' earnings, educational attainment and even arrest rates. Our expert panel explores findings, practices and perspectives from the National Assessment Governing Board, Harvard University and Stanford University, with perspectives from the state of Virginia on the long-term impact of accountability on student outcomes.

Moderator: Dr. Christy Hovantez, Sr. Policy Fellow, ExcelinEd

Panelists:

- Dr. Tom Kane, Harvard Graduate School of Education
- Aimee Guidera, Secretary of Education for the Commonwealth of Virginia
- Dr. Eric Hanushek, Hoover Institution of Stanford University

POWER TO THE PARENTS: POLICIES THAT GIVE KIDS THE EXPERIENCES THEY NEED

Parents are demanding different, more personalized experiences for their children, and some states are responding by “unbundling” education. From eliminating district boundaries to micro- and transportation grants, creative new policies are putting families in the driver's seat. Join this session for insights about the newest school choice reforms that give families access to innovative educational options, from Pre-K to 12.
