Race in the Statehouse: Equitable Governance

As public awareness of inequity increases, it is imperative that our nation encourage, develop, and sustain governing communities that are equipped to identify and rectify areas in our society where systemically race-based, unjust, and inequitable manifestations of policy are created and still legally upheld. State and local governments represent the best opportunity to advocate, legislate, and implement policies that directly improve quality of life for all citizens. This can only be achieved through equitable governance.

As a part of the annual Race in the State House series, policymakers, experts, and other leaders will show governing bodies can develop and support equitable legislation including a lack of engagement between constituents and legislators; expectation gaps between protest, politics, and policy making; the continued spread of "truth decay" in public discourse; and the lack of established safe spaces for legislators and support staff to convene and evaluate legislation on equity-based metrics as they seek to define "equitable governance" and why this approach is the answer to achieving better governance for all.

4. Education and Workforce Development

Addressing Learning Gaps Related to the COVID-19 Pandemic

The extent of disruption from the COVID-19 pandemic has been acutely felt in K-12 education, particularly on student learning. Both the Northwest Evaluation Association (MAP) and Curriculum Associates (iReady) suggest lower than average performance since Spring of 2020, based on their national assessment data. Both organizations signal substantial erosion among underserved and at-risk populations. Research indicates that Black, Hispanic, and American Indian or Alaska Native students, student already behind a grade-level, and students in high poverty schools, faced disproportionate declines. As 2022 legislative sessions continue and policymakers consider potential remedies, many schools already are using intervention/remediation programs in the return to traditional schooling. Some states have filed, even passed, legislation that appropriates funds for these programs to target academic shortcomings. Further evaluation of these policies and outcomes could help states target academic achievement lost due to the COVID-19 pandemic, particularly among vulnerable populations.

Plenary Luncheon: The Ona Judge Story

Speaker:

Erica Armstrong Dunbar, author, historian, and Charles and Mary Beard Professor of History, Rutgers University

Enslaved by George and Martha Washington, Ona “Oney” Judge served the Washington family at Mount Vernon, and the presidential residences in New York City and Philadelphia. Learning of plans to transfer her bondage to Martha’s granddaughter, known to be temperamental, Judge fled to New Hampshire. The subject of an intense “manhunt and” relentless pursuit by George Washington to recapture his property, Oney spent the remainder of her life in New Hampshire in uncertainty based on her stolen freedom. Oney Judge is one of America’s most intriguing historic figures but isn’t well-known outside of New Hampshire. Join us for the exciting story of Ona Judge, who was Never Caught and remained free in New Hampshire.

1. Agriculture and Rural Affairs

Climate Change and Its Impact on Northeastern Agriculture — According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, “Climate change presents real threats to U.S. agricultural production, forest resources, and rural economies. These threats have significant implications, not just for farmers, ranchers, and forest landowners, but for all Americans. As these risks continue and amplify, producers will be faced with the challenges of adapting.” Join us for an in-depth look at how these challenges will reshape agriculture nationally and regionally, and what legislators can do to protect and prepare their rural economies, producers, and farming families.

Speaker:

David Hollinger, Ph.D., director, USDA Northeast Climate Hub, USDA Forest Service Research Center

Russell C. Redding, Secretary, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture

2. Transportation

Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act: What it Means for the States — The recently enacted federal bipartisan infrastructure law reauthorizes surface transportation programs for five years and provides significant new investment in the various transportation modes. The Act provides new federal funding to support roads and bridges, public transit, freight and passenger rail, ports, airports, and other infrastructure areas. This esteemed panel of modal experts will provide important information on what current and new funding opportunities exist for the states.

Moderator:

- Representative Pat Brennan, Vermont; chair, CSG East Transportation Committee

Panelists:

- Florence Chen, associate director for bipartisan infrastructure law implementation, U.S. Department of Transportation (USDOT)
- Susan Howard, director, policy and government affairs, American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials (AASHTO)

Rural Broadband: Helping States Fund the Final Mile — Broadband plays a central role in all aspects of modern life, from education to logistics, health, and agribusiness. However, 25 percent of the U.S. rural population still lacks access to even minimum-speed broadband. But now, through the recently passed Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act, states will receive hundreds of millions of dollars for broadband buildout. How states manage and oversee the distribution of this money will be critical in the months and years ahead. Join our panel of experts as they lead discussion on the most critical state-level solutions for bridging the connectivity gap.

2. Energy and Environment

Advancing Offshore Wind in the Northeast — Offshore wind activity has gained momentum in the Northeast, with some 30 gigawatts on track for development by 2030, enough to power roughly 20 million homes. The industry is expected to support tens of thousands of jobs and reduce carbon pollution, but it is still nascent, and maximizing its success will require coordinated efforts among states, industry, the federal government, and local stakeholders. This session will provide a status report on current commercial-scale offshore wind projects, efforts to scale transmission and other infrastructure to create greater efficiencies and reduce costs, and an update on workforce and supply-chain development opportunities throughout the region.

Moderator:

- Senator Marc Pacheco, Massachusetts, co-chair, CSG East Energy and Environment Committee

Panelists:

- Christian Scorzoni, director of government affairs, Vineyard Wind
- Peter Shattuck, president, Anbaric New England

- Bob Gordon, commissioner, New Jersey Board of Public Utilities

4. Canada-U.S. Relations

Bilateral Relations and the U.S. Canadian-Border: Putting the pieces back together post-COVID — After two years of a closed then partially open border, how do the United States and Canada define a “new normal?” The panel will look at the consequences of the border closure during the pandemic and its effect on border communities, local economies, trucking, and tourism. The panel will also discuss recent irritants in the bilateral relationship, including Buy-American provisions in stimulus legislation, and sector-specific issues such as electric vehicles, potatoes, and softwood lumber.

Moderators:

- Assemblyman Billy Jones, New York; co-chair, Canada-U.S. Relations Committee

Panelists:

- Christopher Sands, director, Wilson Center Canada Institute
- Garry Douglas, president and CEO, North Country Chamber of Commerce

Plenary Session

Opioids and Harm Reduction: States Act —Drug overdoses are the leading cause of injury related deaths in the United States, with nearly 75 percent of those deaths involving opioids. State efforts to reduce the devastating effects of opioids will be enhanced by the $26 billion global opioid settlement that requires 85 percent of funds to be used for treatment, education, and prevention. Several jurisdictions in the CSG East region — Quebec, Ontario (Toronto), Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island — have worked with legislators, police, and health professionals to address the growing opioid epidemic. The panel will discuss those approaches, opioid deaths, and experiences with overdose prevention centers representing collaborations at the sub-federal level and collaboration among Canadian and U.S. members.

Speakers:

- Carol Wei, MS, FNP, RN – SUNY Downstate Health Sciences University College of Nursing; community and acute care nurse, Brooklyn, NY
- Brandon Marshall, Ph.D., associate professor of Epidemiology, School of Public Health, Brown University; expert advisor to the Rhode Island Governor's Overdose Prevention and Intervention Task Force

Plenary Luncheon

The Age of Transformation: Workforce Development and Education in a post COVID economy

Introduction: Mayor Joyce Craig, mayor of Manchester, New Hampshire

More than one-half of the world's 7.7 billion people still do not have access to the Internet, including millions of people in the United States, which has led the digital revolution. Most of these non-adopters — whether by choice or circumstance — are poor, less educated, people of color, older, or living in rural communities. What are the consequences of digital exclusion? A broad array of occupations is at risk for disruption or elimination because of technological change and automation. Workers in nearly every industry are already being affected. More than one third of job skills required for most jobs in 2016 have already been replaced by new technologies in 2020. It's clear that those who are on the wrong side of the digital divide will fall deeper into poverty and social and physical isolation. Discussion will focus on what policy solutions can states promulgate to fill the gaps and remedy digital disparities in infrastructure and education to enhance U.S. competitiveness.

Moderator:

- Scott Spradling, Emmy award-winning former reporter, anchor and political director, WMUR-TV in Manchester, New Hampshire; founder, The Spradling Group.

Panelists:

- Matt Dunne, founder and executive director, Center on Rural Innovation (CORI)

Tour of the Advanced Regenerative Manufacturing Institute (ARMI)

Tour Leaders:

- Tom Bollenbach, chief technology officer, ARMI | BioFabUSA
- Maureen Toohey, deputy executive director, ARMI | BioFabUSA

Headquartered in Manchester, New Hampshire, the ARMI organization is funded by the U.S. Department of Defense. ARMI's mission is to make practical the scalable manufacturing of engineered tissues and tissue-related technologies, to benefit existing industries and grow new ones. ARMI brings together a consortium of more than 175 partners from across industry, government, academia, and the non-profit sector to develop next-generation manufacturing processes and technologies for cells, tissues, and organs. Two groups of 20 people each will tour both the Tissue Foundry and ARMI Bioindustries.

Tissue Foundry

BioFabUSA's Tissue Foundry is a working prototype of SMAC (Scalable, Modular, Automated, and Closed) manufacturing. SMAC will enable quality-by-design manufacturing, essential for the 25-year-old concept of the engineered organ to become economically feasible.

ARMI Bioindustries

ARMI BioIndustries is the full-service development and manufacturing operation within the Advanced Regenerative Manufacturing Institute (ARMI) that provides developers of engineered cells, tissues, and organs a comprehensive range of services covering process development, deep tissue, and material characterization, clinical manufacturing, and regulatory support. Located in a 30,000-square-foot, state-of-the-art development center, ARMI BioIndustries leverages BioFabUSA's Tissue Foundry concept and the extensive experience and expertise of its scientists and engineers to enable the scalable, consistent and cost-effective manufacturing of engineered cells, tissues, and organs.

Tapping into a Diverse Workforce: Filling Unmet Employment Opportunities —

The U.S. labor shortage is jeopardizing economic expansion in almost every state. The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports there are more than 11.5 million jobs available in the United States, but only approximately 6 million unemployed workers. The huge gap between available jobs and available workers is true in every region of the United States. This is a sharp contrast to mid-2009 when there were multiple people vying for each job in every state.

At the same time, the country also is experiencing the “great resignation,” with workers opting out of current employment for myriad reasons, including concerns over COVID-19 safety and regulations, increased need for and a shortage of affordable childcare caused by the pandemic, desire for more fulfilling or higher-paying employment, and the “silver tsunami” of older workers retiring as they age.

States can fill these employment opportunities and stimulate their COVID recovery by focusing recruitment into employment opportunities for traditionally underutilized populations and utilizing work-based learning, re-skilling, and upskilling programs and new and innovative hiring approaches.

Solving the Employment Crisis: Looking Toward a Bright Future! Changes to the nation’s workforce and economy require new solutions — updates to work and employment policies and the systems that support workers and how they are valued. This panel will examine changes that may be required to get more people back to work and solve an employment crisis that has had an impact on many industries. It will highlight a program aimed at preparing, recruiting, developing, and retaining educators, and a state that is planning new investments in childcare to improve the labor participation of women in order to expand the workforce.

Speakers:

- Thomas Kochan, Post-Tenure George Maverick Bunker Professor, MIT Sloan School of Management; faculty member, MIT Institute for Work and Employment Research.
- David Donaldson, managing partner, National Center for Grow Your Own.

Working lunch: Training, Reskilling and Upskilling the Workforce: Utilizing apprenticeships to fill employment gaps

Apprenticeships are a proven strategy for increasing labor force participation and lowering unemployment. By creating and fostering apprenticeships — particularly in the technology sector — states can engage untapped talent pools while also reskilling and upskilling employees into high quality careers. This session will feature presentations on innovative workforce development models that cities, counties, and states are using to train employees. State policymakers and subject-matter experts also will discuss how they engage individuals from underrepresented communities to support local infrastructure development. The session will feature:

Moderator:

- Miriam Farnbauer, project director of the Skills Initiative

Speaker:

- Angela V. McKnight, Assemblywoman, New Jersey
- Laura Maristany, director of external affairs, Bitwise Industries.
- Rayanne Hawkins, policy program manager, Research to Action Lab at the Urban Institute
