SCTE Panel: Technology disruption comes to the Cable Access Network: HFC Evolution to Remote PHY (RPHY) and Full Duplex DOCSIS (FDX)
The Cable MSO access networks will undergo dramatic change over the next 10 years. This change will involve the replacement of the current HFC network with vastly different technologies.
What will these technologies bring to these networks? What new features will be available? How will they be deployed? Over what time period will this change take place? How will operators manage this fundamental change? These are all good questions that are on the minds of every person involved in the design, deployment and operations of these networks and will be answered by our outstanding panel of industry leaders and experts. Join us as we delve into what these new technologies have in store for the MSO community and learn from those who have been involved in their development from first inception to real products.

over the next 10 years. This change will involve the replacement of the current HFC network with vastly different technologies.
What will these technologies bring to these networks? What new
time period will this change take place? How will operators manage this fundamental change? These are all good questions that are on the minds of every person involved in the design, deployment
and operations of these networks and will be answered by our outstanding panel of industry leaders and experts. Join us as we
delve into what these new technologies have in store for the MSO
community and learn from those who have been involved in their development from first inception to real products.
