3:00 PM: Framing discussion of reasons for action, benefits, and challenges

4:15 PM: Break

4:30 PM: Discussion of proposed retreat outcomes, including working agreement

In meetings and calls leading up to the retreat, state leaders identified as a goal the development of a “working agreement” for moving forward with the development of one or more models for market-based policies. The proposed policies for focus include:

- clean transportation investment strategies that can provide economic benefits and tools to finance and fund those policies, including green banks and value capture;
- a “cap and invest” model that could both reduce GHG emissions from transportation fuels and generates proceeds for clean transportation investment among participating states; and
- mileage-based fees as a climate policy, aligning with and complementing the I-95 Corridor Coalition proposed mileage-based fee demonstration project.

Participants will have a high-level discussion about options for interested states to agree to move forward to develop or explore these policies, including what role additional analysis might play, with the aim of identifying a consensus framework for the “working agreement.” They will also discuss different ways that states could participate and what kind of public engagement and communication might be involved.

5:30 PM: Reception

6:00 PM: Dinner

8:00 PM: Evening session — Capturing the challenge and the vision

Participants will enjoy post-dinner refreshments and informal conversations to identify critical rationale, context, and vision that should be captured in any agreement.

Agenda

7:00 AM: Breakfast

8:00 AM: Review of agreement language developed on first day and overview of second day goals

8:30 AM: Clean transportation investment, financing, and funding

Previous TCI analysis showed that investments in clean transportation can achieve additional GHG emission reductions and drive economic development, including through investments in transit, clean freight modes, electric vehicles and infrastructure, system operations, smart growth, and others. State leaders will identify regional analyses and tools that could help states cost-effectively further such investments. Participants will also discuss whether and how TCI should identify options to finance and fund such investments (e.g., green banks, value capture) as well as promote investments by counties and municipalities.

10:00 AM: Morning coffee break

10:30 AM: Development of potential cap-and-invest model

Informed by analysis and previous discussions, the group would seek to identify high-level areas of agreement on what a model policy cap-and-invest policy could contain, identify key issues that would be important to address in the course of policy development, and identify any additional analysis that would be necessary. In this first session, the group will discuss the general cap-and-invest model; the fuels and entities that could be covered by such a policy; considerations related to the level of the cap; the potential timeframe for the model policy; and how the cap might be shared among states.

11:45 PM: Lunch

12:45 PM: Development of potential cap-and-invest model continued

In this second session on developing a model cap-and-invest policy, the group would discuss how the policy might operate; potential links to other programs; potential mechanisms to address costs; and potential mechanisms to address competitiveness and equity issues.

2:00 PM: Afternoon coffee break

2:30 PM: Review draft agreement on “path forward”

State leaders will review and provide input on draft language developed by the group in previous sessions, identifying a path forward for interested states to develop potential market-based policies. The goal is to come to a working agreement that state leaders could take back to vet with their administrations.

3:30 PM: Next steps

State leaders will discuss next steps, including the following:

- What to communicate publicly about the outcomes of the retreat;
- What will be the process and timing for completing an agreement on a path forward;
- When and how to engage other experts and stakeholders; and
- What additional information or briefings will be necessary in the near term.

4:30 PM: Meeting adjourns
