EXPLANATION

This course, Principles of Health, will benefit the employee and the Department as it is the first class in the Master's of Public Health Program at Southern New Hampshire University (SNHU). This course covers the history and structure of the public health system, the ten essential services, and core knowledge needed to understand complex factors impacting health behaviors in the community. This course will give Ms. Clark a better understanding of public health outside of the laboratory environment, and help create connections between the testing provided by Ms. Clark, and the people it helps. By completing the Master's of Public Health degree, Ms. Clark will understand the connections between the Public Health Lab and the other sections of the Division of Public Health, and strengthen inter-department cooperation.

Stephanie Clark has been employed by the Department of Health and Human Services, Division of Public Health as a Laboratory Scientist III, in the Environmental Microbiology unit of the Public Health Lab for just over a year. She participates in dairy and food microbiological testing, shellfish toxin testing, and rabies virus detection. She tests restaurant food, milk from New Hampshire dairy farms, and locally harvested shellfish for bacteria that could potentially cause illness if consumed. She also tests shellfish for harmful Paralytic Shellfish Poison. In addition, if a person has been exposed to an animal that could be rabid, she conducts rabies testing on the animals in order to help the Public Health Nurses advise their patients regarding the need for prophylactics.

The Department of Health and Human Services encourages and supports employees who wish to further their professional growth through continuing education in disciplines that are mutually advantageous.

This course will not be taken on State time.

Attached is a fully executed Tuition Agreement for your review.

Respectfully submitted,
